

The Window Into Tomorrow

I reflect the flowers
a butterfly find it peaceful to land on,
I've oppressed my mind
over this edge often,
and I find the wind very friendly—How wings appear and suspends me in the air—
Long enough to bottle up a smile to bring to a child—Wings they thought they never had.

By: Amos Don